

About Judd:

Judd is the real inspiration for the Sleepy Dog name. Before his rescue, Judd's previous owner left him chained up outdoors with no food or water. He survived on plants and snow and who knows what else much of the time. He had an open wound on his back of unknown origin and his owner did not want him inside because he would "start to bleed when he warmed up"! Thankfully, the owner's daughter told her teacher about Judd one day and after weeks of effort, the owner surrendered Judd.

After the veterinarian examination, they found Judd was 30 pounds underweight (an adult Boxer/St. Bernard mix weighing only 70 pounds!) with a BB gun pellet near his spine. He had 5 glass shards in his back, the largest piece being 2" x 3". Judd also tested positive for Lyme disease, heartworms and anaplasmosis. He had even ground his front teeth down to nothing from chewing on his chain trying to escape his prison.

After a few weeks of recovery, Judd was transferred to Midwest Animal Rescue Services (MARS) and his story was published in his online adoption post. Having recently lost one dog unexpectedly, we were reluctant to adopt another dog so soon. After reading Judd's story online, there simply was no other choice.

Judd now spends the majority of his time sprawled out on the office floor as I work at my computer. He is such a loving, friendly and obedient dog that it's hard to believe he came from such a horrible situation. If he wants to spend the rest of his days being a lazy, sleepy, totally pampered dog, he well deserves it!

About Marie:

Marie took her first programming class in high school and has been working on computers ever since. Lofty standards, attention to detail and semi-OCD (Obsessive Compulsive Disorder) tendencies make her a worthy ally for anyone with a need for technological and creative assistance.

Armed with an interesting resume packed with unique and varied experience, Marie has always been the problem solver wherever she goes. Being able to quickly assess the situation, see how it can be improved upon and then make it happen, has been her strong suit. Maybe the stint working as a police dispatcher and telling people what to do in a crisis has something to do with it!

Motherhood and caretaking make for quite a busy lifestyle, however computer work is often the perfect therapeutic outlet! With Judd by her side, it makes work not such a bad thing!
